

The History
OF Little Two-shoes.

LONDON:
Printed for R. Carr, by
G. Cox.

CHILDREN'S BOOK
COLLECTION

LIBRARY OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

The History of ## LITTLE

TWO-SHOES.

---

Little Goody Two-shoes was left an orphan at a very early age, her real name was Smith, but having a pair of new shoes given to her, she was so proud of them, that she used to run after the people in the street to bid them look at them, by which she gained the name of little Geody Two-shoes.

She was a very good child, and behaved so obliging to every one, that all strove to assist her, and as she was very industrious, her friends put her in a little cottage on the common.

Soon as the lark began to sing in the morning, she would rise from her bed, and hastening into the yard, feed her stock of poultry, which consisted of six hens and a cock, two ducks and a drake, and a goose with thirteen goslings.

Having laid by the eggs very carefully, in order to take to market, she would then get her breakfast, and the remainder of the day she devoted to spinning, and improving herself, and thus was enabled by her industry to maintain herself.

A neighbouring farmer gave her a little pig, which in due time, produced nine young ones; she also had a Ewe, and two lambs, which used to skip and play about her.

Goody Two-shoes was now looked upon as a little farmer, and took her little brother to live with her. by whose help she was enabled to do more than she otherwise could have done; and by the time she was grown a woman, she was so highly respected, that she married the clergyman of the Parish, and became a fine lady, and rode in her carriage.

Thus my little readers you see what can be done by industry

and good behaviour,
which makes you beloved by your friends
when on the contrary,
if you behave ill, you
will be despised by all.

FINIS.

